Longevity, healthcare, earnings expectations and life paths often mean that women should follow different rules when it comes to planning for and living in retirement. On average women tend to live 2-3 years longer than men, spend 3x as much as men on long-term care and have about 50% as much in their retirement accounts as men. A one-size fits all approach to planning simply won't work. In this class we talk about how to address healthcare planning, asset management, social security and estate planning for women. This is a good class both for women and anyone advising women on financial matters.
